1) 'Read the passage and answer the following questions:

Roald Dahl was suffering from adenoids. So the doctor bent over him, holding that long, shiny instrument, and to this day he can remember it perfectly. It was as thick as a pencil and had many sides to it. At the end the metal became much thinner, and in this was set a metal blade at an angle. The blade was just a centimeter long, very small, very sharp, and very shiny.

The doctor said in Norwegian, 'Open your mouth.'

He refused as he thought the doctor was going to do something to his teeth, and from his past experience he knew that it would be painful. The doctor spoke again very gently, and like an ass he agreed to open his mouth.

He was eight years old. That was in 1924 when taking out a child's tonsils as well as adenoids without any anaesthetic was common. He wonders what you think if a doctor would do that to you today.
