1) Read the following text and do the activities that follow:

Kathakali, a dance form, native to Kerala in South India literally means 'story play'. It is a classical dance drama, colourful and dramatic in content and character. This art form is three hundred years old. Most of its elements and choreography have been influenced by a 9th century art form of Kerala called Koodiyattam, recently recognized by the UNESCO as a heritage art form.

Surprisingly for a drama form, the Kathakali dancers do not speak a word. A group of narrators' recites the story in the form of a song and the dancers interpret the narrative live with hand gestures called mudras combined with facial expressions and eyes movements.

There are at least seven hundred mudras combined in twenty four different ways. The best dancers can move the eyeballs in 17 ways. There are eight ways to move the eyebrows and eight for the eyelids. It is surprising how they manage it. Till recently Kathakali was danced only by men. Men also enacted a female role with elegance and charm.

The dancers take up four to five hours before the play to paint their lips, eyebrows and eyelashes. All characters having their prescribed make up.
